Tips for Delivering Trauma-Informed Professional Learning for Educators

SAFETY
- Share training topics in advance
- Begin by recognizing that the content may be distressing for some & invite educators to step away if necessary
- Don’t ask staff to fill out a trauma screening questionnaire

TRUST AND TRANSPARENCY
- Dedicate time for relationship building
- Acknowledge that there is not a "one size fits all" answer to addressing student trauma
- Demonstrate empathy for educators’ emotional reactions to challenging behaviors

PEER SUPPORT
- Address secondary traumatic stress, burnout, and self-care
- Foster social networks among participants
- Provide ongoing coaching or consultation

COLLABORATION
- Take a strengths-based approach
- Acknowledge the work that educators are already doing
- Learn about the school, educators, and students as much as possible beforehand

VOICE AND CHOICE
- Show alignment between trauma-informed practices and other initiatives in the school
- Build educators’ toolboxes with many different strategies
- Provide time for educators to reflect on how to apply their learning about trauma to their classrooms

CULTURE AND CONTEXT
- Be attentive to your social position in relation to participants and the school community
- Talk about systems that contribute to student trauma, including schools
- Build empathy for educators’ students and their families, as well as colleagues
